Allies' Offensive Operations Welcomed By the Germans

German Minister of War and Chief of Staff of Armies Grants Associated Press First Interview Given Any Correspondent.
Says British Are Good Fighters, But an Army Without Necessary Officers and Non-Commissioned Officers Is Scarcely an Army.

(By Associated Press.)

General Field Headquarters of the German Armies in France, Jan. 19, via London, Jan. 20.—"More of such offensive (referring to the present offensive operations of the Allies) can only be welcome to us."

"The British are good fighters, but an army without the necessary officers and non-commissioned officers is scarcely an army."

"We are fully prepared for any attempt at a landing in Belgium, the sooner it comes the better."

There are phrases, full of quiet optimism, of Lieutenant General Erich von Falkenhayn, the German minister of war and chief of staff of German armies in the field, who today granted The Associated Press the first interview given any correspondent.

The general talked frankly of the military operations and the prospects of the war, which he does not expect will be a short one.

General von Falkenhayn is the man responsible, under the emperor for the strategy in the great world war. He is the youngest of any of the leaders of the European armies, with a tremendous capacity for hard, concentrated work.

He is at his desk in an old French government building, which houses the German general staff, from dawn until late at night. Here, he performs the dual functions of minister of war and chief of the general staff. The general flashed into public notice with his memorable defense of the German army in the Zabrern debate in the Reichstag.

"This war is not a war of aggression," says General Falkenhayn. "It is not a war brought about by a military caste or military party, in Germany, but one of self defense. As a soldier, I cannot, of course, talk on the political aspects of the causes of the war, but can speak from a military standpoint."

"It was forced on us by the Russian mobilization in the face of which we could do nothing but arm ourselves. Russia has been warned that if she mobilized we must, in self defense, order a general mobilization and take steps to protect our national existence. Russia, nevertheless, went ahead with mobilization, while continuing diplomatic negotiations."

If a man comes into your room for a discussion with gun drawn you can see to it that you are not expected to wait for him to cock and level it before reaching for your gun to defend your life.

"Our present situation is excellent. We have no cause to complain. We have carried the war into the enemy's country on both fronts; we are still there after five months of war. Our present lines are strong; the advantage is all on our side thus far."

"If our first advance against Paris had succeeded fully it would have been reckoned a most brilliant achievement. As it stands it is an admirable one. But one cannot expect to carry a war without some checks and when we fell back, we swung over to the present line of action in which we have been thoroughly successful."

"It is wrong to interpret operations in Flanders as an attempt on our part to reach Calais and outflank the Allied armies. On the contrary, that phase of the campaign is the result of an attempt on the part of the French and British to force their way north to separate us from the sea and envelop our right flank and rear, and to prevent our relieving our troops in Belgium."

"Their plan was the failure, our counter stroke the success of operations in Flanders. They have not outflanked us, and we are still there."

"What is your view of the general offensive of the Allies and Kitcheners' new army?" he was asked.

"The offensive," he replied, "was to begin, according to General Joffre's order, on the day of December 17, so far we have no reason to be dissatisfied with its results. We not only have held our lines successfully, but have gained ground. More of such offensive can only be welcome to us."

"As to Kitcheners' army, the British are good fighters and I have all respect for them, but an army without necessary officers and non-commissioned officers is scarcely an army, according to present day standards. They may send them over to attack us, but I think we are strong enough to drive them back with bloody heads."

There was nothing boastful in General von Falkenhayn's manner. His statements were made with confidence in the preparedness of the German army and in its ability.

"What effect upon the German conduct of the war, was asked, 'has the British blockade and contraband policy exercised?'"

"Practically none at all," he replied. "Of food, we have enough. Have you observed any scarcity in Germany?"

"The problem of feeding the civil population of Belgium, Poland and the occupied parts of France, presents some difficulties, but for ourselves we have enough."

"As for the embargo on copper," General von Falkenhayn laughed. "It is true, but above ground, it is more than enough for all military needs. If our regular supplies become exhausted, we need only draw on the enormous quantities of manufactured copper already in Germany. In our cables for transmitting electric current, for instance, we have a couple of years' supply."

may last or can last?—Lord Kitcheners' three years?"

"It can last indefinitely for us, I see nothing that can force us to stop fighting."

"Foods and materials? We are amply supplied. Our strategic position is good. Human material? Don you know the recruits of the 1915 class are to be called to the colors? October 1915 is the normal date. Does that look as if there is any lack of soldiers? We have more troops in Berlin today than in peace times. They still need training, however. No men are sent to the front without adequate preparation."

"Enthusiasm? You have been at the front and know there is no lacking in the zeal of the men for their task. We can go on indefinitely."

"And if in this war, in which Kalmucks, Kamchatskans, Turcomans, Senegal negroes, Indians and what not have been brought in to maintain the balance of power in the world, it is that, through industry and hard work, it has prospered and is prosperous, we should go down, we shall go down with honor, fighting to the last ditch and the last man."

"And how far does Germany wish to carry this war—until the other side is completely crushed?"

"Until they are so defeated that a possibility of a repetition of this unprovoked attack upon us is completely eliminated," he declared earnestly.

"What about the new clouds on the horizon?—Italy and Rumania?"

"Those are questions you should address to the imperial chancellor or the foreign secretary."

"But under certain contingencies, they might become questions of interest to the chief of the general staff."

"Out of the question!" was the emphatic reply. "I cannot believe that these two nations, which have been united to us for 20 years by ties of alliance, should suddenly array themselves in the ranks of our enemies. I consider that utterly impossible."

Standard Remedy For Many Homes

Indigestion and constipation are two conditions closely related and the cause of much physical suffering.

The tendency to indulge one's appetite is general, so that most people suffer at some time or another from rebellion of the overtaxed organs of digestion and elimination. A simple, pleasantly effective remedy that will quickly relieve the congestion of poisonous waste and restore regularity, is the combination of simple laxative herbs with pepsin, sold in drug stores under the name of Dr. Caldwell's (Grip) Pepsin. This is a mild, pleasant laxative-herb and digestant, absolutely free from opiates or narcotic drugs and has been the standard household remedy in countless homes for many years. ## VEDDER SITTON CLEMSON COACH

Has Distinction of Winning Two Pennants in Two Leagues in the Same Season.

Special to The Intelligencer.

CLEMSON, COLLEGE, Jan. 1.—To have pitched two separate teams to victory in the final games of the season in two leagues in the same season is some distinction. That is what Vedder Sitton did. And this same Vedder Sitton is the Clemson coach this spring. It was four or five years ago that some major league team farmed out Sitton. He pitched for Jacksonville in the South Atlantic league, and was put up for the last game of the race that was to decide where the flag should float. He won his game and the pennant. Then he joined the Nashville team in the Southern league, and there he repeated his performance with brilliancy. Not many pitchers have a record like that.

Vedder Sitton was one of the best pitchers Clemson ever had. He left college to go with one of the big league teams. He has had so much valuable experience. He and his brother Phil, thought by some to be even better than Vedder, played with Troy, New York, last season, and made good records.

Vedder and Phil were football stars too. Vedder was all Southern and along in 1903 with Bot Blake, who has been picked by Heisman as the best in the South. Vedder Sitton and Hope Sadler were the finest ends that Clemson ever had.

Sitton's home is at Pendleton, a historic town about 40 miles from Clemson. He trains every spring with the Tigers for a while, and consequently he is well known by the players and fans of the players well.

SOUTHERN MAKING TRACK IMPROVEMENTS

Additions to Spartanburg Yards and Extensions Between That Place and Charleston.

(By Associated Press.)

SPARTANBURG, Jan. 20.—In connection with its modern export coal terminal, now under construction at Charleston, Southern Railway announces that on February 1st it will begin work on important additions to its Spartanburg yards and will also extend a number of passing tracks between Spartanburg and Charleston so as to get ready to handle the long trains required to move the increased volume of coal traffic from the Tennessee and Southwest Virginia fields which it is hoped will be developed.

It is expected that the terminal will be completed by May 1st and the additional track facilities will also be ready by that time.

Two additional receiving tracks will be constructed at the Spartanburg Junction classification yard and two at East Spartanburg. Passing tracks will be extended at Carlisle, Alston, and Herbert on the Spartanburg division and at Riley and Fort Motte on the Charleston division. These extensions will make possible the handling through from Spartanburg to Charleston of the maximum tonnage of the power now in use, pusher service being provided from Kingville to Riley, 17 miles.

While on account of the decreased revenues, resulting from the business depression, very little work of this character is being undertaken at this time, Southern Railway determined to make these particular improvements so as to be able immediately to give the coal mine operators on its lines the fullest advantages from the construction of the Charleston terminals.

OPPRESSORS OF MINOR LEAGUES

COUNSEL FOR FEDERAL LEAGUE MAKES OPENING ADDRESS IN SUIT

CASE WILL LAST INTO NEXT WEEK

First Session Attracts Large Number of Baseball Followers and Players of Note.

(By Associated Press.)

CHICAGO, Jan. 23.—The powers that control organized baseball were described as oppressors of minor leagues and players by Keese Addington counsel for the Federal League, in his opening address today in the anti-trust suit against the National Commission, the American and the National Leagues. The Attorney cited features of the National Agreement, decisions of the National Commission and general practices of baseball authorities to show that the game is governed by a group having almost absolute power to make laws, judge infractions and impose penalties.

Addington had not finished his opening argument when court adjourned tonight and it was declared the case probably would last well into next week. The first session attracted a large number of baseball followers, including the presidents of both defendant leagues, the chairman of the National Commission, leaders of the Federals and many players of note.

Addington devoted a large portion of his address to an attack on the waiver and draft rules and practices. He declared the former vetoed control of the player not alone in the club he serves, but also in other clubs. His chance of becoming a free agent is slight, according to Addington, since it requires action of many different entities. The attorney charged that the waiver method has been used as a means of humiliating or disciplining a player. He referred to a statement made in an affidavit by Mordecai Brown that when President Murphy, of the Chicago National, sold him to Louisville it was with the agreement that Brown never would be allowed again to join the majors.

Attorney George W. Miller, for the defendants, called attention to the fact that Brown later played with Cincinnati, in a major league, but Addington said the agreement between Chicago and Louisville was what he wished to show was possible.

"Even if it kept a player out of major league ball only for a time, the harm is apparent," he argued.

The fact that a player is without choice as to the club or league in which he plays was declared by the Federal's counsel to constitute oppression.

Changes made in the player's contract last year at the behest of the Players' Fraternity were declared by Addington not to have materially modified it. He called it remarkable that such close associates as Chairman Herrmann and President Johnson should disagree in interpretation of the contract, as he charged they did. Johnson, he said, declared in his affidavit that the option extended a contract for one year only.

Judge Landis was particularly interested in the Brown case and asked that it be re-described. He showed a knowledge of the national game by calling counsel's attention to the fact that a petition purporting to be from the Players' Fraternity to the National Commission was signed by players from only one club. It was explained that the players had petitioned by teams.
